The app offers personalised recommendations, such as avoiding outdoor activities during pollution spikes or using air purifiers indoors

India is grappling with a dual environmental threat: skyrocketing air pollution and increasingly erratic weather patterns. Cities like Delhi choke under hazardous smog, while unpredictable rainfall disrupts life in Mumbai.

For millions, this isn't just an inconvenience—it's a looming health crisis marked by rising respiratory illnesses and heightened vulnerability for children, the elderly, and those with pre-existing conditions. Amidst this grim reality, hope emerges in the form of innovation. A Gurugram - based high school student, Paarth Vijarania, is developing a groundbreaking app, SafeSphere, to empower individuals with real-time tools to safeguard their health in the face of environmental risks.

SafeSphere: An AI-Powered Health Guardian

" SafeSphere, an AI-driven mobile app, is poised to transform how people navigate the challenges of pollution and extreme weather. Leveraging live data from APIs like Open Weather Map and BreezoMeter, the app provides real-time insights into air quality and weather conditions. With pollution rising and weather patterns becoming unpredictable, having access to accurate, real-time information is crucial. SafeSphere empowers people
